4 Solutions to Exercises

4.1 About these solutions

The solutions that follow were prepared by David K. Netter. I occasionally pilfered or plagiarized solutions from the second edition (prepared by George McCloskey) but take full responsibility for any errors that may remain. Should you discover any errors or have any comments about these solutions or the old answers, in the back of the text, please report them to me:

4.2 Using the table of random digits

Reading 52's choice from the table of random digits is complicated by the fact that students can find some creative ways to traverse the table. Some approaches are not random, but only lead to different random digits having different "right" answers. Correct answers will vary based on:

- The line in the table on which they begin (you may want to specify one if the text does not)
• Whether they start with, e.g., 00 or 01.
• Whether or not they assign multiple labels to each digit.
• Whether they assign labels across the rows or down the column (nearly all lists in the text are alphabetical down the column).
Some approaches are potentially tied to wrong answers. Mistakes to watch out for include:
• They may forget that all labels must be the same length, e.g., assigning labels like 0, 1, 2, ..., 9, 10, ... rather than 00, 01, 02, ...
• In assigning multiple labels, they may not give the same number of labels to all units. E.g., if there are 20 units, they may try to use equal the two-digit numbers, then assigning 4 labels to the first ten units and only 3 to the remaining twenty.

4.3 Using statistical software

The use of computer software or a calculator is a must for all but the necessary treatment of the material in this text. Be aware of the following considerations:
